

This is Brent Nishioka presenting our proposal for Pentaskilled, comprised of group members Vivian Dinh, Gideon Essel, Joshua Ramos, and Raymond Guevara. Our project is called MEet & You (tentative name). MEet & You is a web app that allows couples to plan dates by giving recommendations based on what they want to do.

We intend for couples to use MEet & You, however, it can also be useful for a friend group.

The pain point is that with couples, there are always struggles with the planning details of the date. Our product expedites the process and saves couples a lot of time when coming up with things to do on a date. It centralizes all activities into a single place so couples don't have to scour the web. Especially because planning a date can be a lot of pressure so this allows the heavy lifting of curating a plan to be left to others.

We hope that couples can value spending more time together rather than spending the entire time planning what to do while also getting a more tailored experience based on their preferences.

Our vision for our application is: For couples who need recommendations for what they want to do, the MEet & You is a web app that expedites the planning and choosing process when it comes to dates.

Currently, the only competitors to our product are services where you pay a person to plan a day for you.

What makes this product different is having all activities and recommendations in one place.
